

We Love Women, But...

By George Cunningham

What's really amazing is how men never get a clue about women. They grow up surrounded by them. They have mothers, sisters, girl cousins, teachers, girlfriends, and women bosses. At some point in their lives, they marry a woman, live in the same house with her, and sleep in the same bed year after year. And finally, when men grow old, and they have made their peace with God, the one thing they still haven't figured out is women. Why do women act the way they do? What do they want? Why do they have to be so complicated and dramatic? And then, their questions still unanswered, the old men die, and all the male generations to follow are left to ponder the same mystery.

There may be only one thing in the world that's harder to figure out than women. That's Italian women. We would never want to stereotype anybody because that's a very rude and inappropriate thing to do, but for Italian women, we are willing to make an exception.

There are certain things we can tell you. Italian women tend to be loving, and they tend to be mean. They will spoil you rotten, then complain about how spoiled you've become. They will baby you, cook for you, cuddle you, and sweeten your nights. But, they will also cut your heart out and dance on it for the smallest perceived slight. And don't ask why. If you don't know, they are not going to tell you.

Don't get us wrong. We like Italian women. If you are walking down a dark street and you are attacked by muggers, some women might run away and cower in the corner. An Italian woman might run away too, but she's only gone to find something big to use as a weapon.

As you can see, we know quite a bit about Italian women. We just wish we could figure them out.
